The Boeing Co. is supporting Mesa College Promise students with a $10,000 gift, opening doors for high school graduates to attend Mesa Community College.

"Boeing is proud to support the Mesa College Promise and the bright students this program will assist. As a recipient of a similar community college program, I can attest that this type of investment has a long lasting impact on awardees' education and career journeys and their resulting contribution to their communities," Leann Shaffer, Boeing's community investor in Arizona, said in a release.

funds or scholarships. Boeing's generosity reflects the commitment and engagement of our business and industry leaders in supporting the attainment of education beyond high school — transforming the future of many families in the city of Mesa — today and the generations to follow.

"The Mesa College Promise program is a win for students, for businesses and for our city, and we're grateful for this contribution from The Boeing Co.," Mesa Mayor John Giles said in the release. "Thanks to generous business partners like Boeing, we're building attainable pathways to higher education for Mesa's graduating high school seniors, and we're investing in the workforce of tomorrow."

"We welcomed the inaugural group of 86 Mesa College Promise scholars to their first college classes in August," Lori M. Berquam, MCC interim president, said in the release. "The Mesa College Promise is more than just financial aid, it's a promise that a college education is attainable. Each of these new Thunderbirds receives personalized academic support, workshops, tutoring, iPads to use and opportunities to intern with Mesa businesses."

I rarely find it useful to respond to liberal articles calling for fruitless change; however, this one is symptomatic of the hogwash that has America on her knees ("Arizona women protest for voting rights," Sun City West Independent, Sept. 15, 2021). It is loaded with emotional triggers and no substance to back up their baseless accusations.
