11/12: 'Duke Ellington's Sacred Concert'

On Nov. 10, 1966, jazz great Duke Ellington brought his "Concert of Sacred Music" — complete with tap dancer — to Phoenix's Trinity Cathedral. The Grammy-winning Phoenix Chorale will mark the 50th anniversary of his visit with a concert featuring selections from the monumental work that fused jazz with both African-American and European sacred music.

Details: Two venues. 3 and 7:30 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 12, at Trinity Episcopal Cathedral, 100 W. Roosevelt St., Phoenix. 3 p.m. Sunday, Nov. 13, at Mesa Community College Performing Arts Center, 1520 S. Longmore. $13-$32. 602-253-2224, phoenixchorale.org (<http://phoenixchorale.org>).

11/13: Lauryn Hill

Lauryn Hill brings her tour to Comerica Theatre on Sunday, Nov. 13. Hill launched her post-Fugees solo career in 1998 with "The Miseducation of Lauryn Hill," an eight-times platinum debut on which her reputation may forever rest — in part because it's so good and in part because she's yet to hit us with another full-length studio release. She did the "MTV Unplugged" thing in 2001. She's guested on some other people's records and released a small handful of singles, including 2010's "Repercussions" and 2013's "Neurotic Society."

Details: 8 p.m. Sunday, Nov. 13. Comerica Theatre, 400 W. Washington St., Phoenix. $38-$98. 800-745-3000, ticketmaster.com (<http://ticketmaster.com/>).

11/15: Ringo Starr and his All Starr Band

The legendary Ringo Starr will bring his All Starr Band — featuring Todd Rundgren, Gregg Rolie, Steve Lukather, Richard Page, Warren Ham and Gregg Bissonette — to Phoenix. This is the former Beatle's longest-running All Starr lineup for a reason. As Starr explains, "I just love playing with this band. I joke that at the end of every tour I think it's the last one and so I fire them. And then we keep finding places we can play and keep it going so I rehire them."
