FLCC awarded $1.5M for research

COMMENT 0

John Van Niel, FLCC professor of environmental conservation and horticulture, holds a mouse as he discusses field research with faculty from other community colleges at a workshop in Canandaigua in 2014. The FLCC-led workshops, held across the country, are funded by the National Science Foundation.

Page 2 of 2 - Additional grants followed, first $133,000 for a national conference in 2013 and $210,000 to include colleges serving Hispanic students in 2014.

FLCC will use some of the latest funds to study the impact the research projects have had at the institutions in the network.

"Our hope is that these projects will get students engaged in science and pursue further education in STEM areas," Hewlett said.
