

RichardHowe.com

Lowell Politics & History

≡ MENU

Show Widgets

Changes at Middlesex Community College by Patrick Cook

January 12, 2015

by DickH

Posted in Education

¹

Comment

Patrick Cook, the Executive Director of Public Affairs at Middlesex Community College who blogs for the college as well, shares the following from MCC:

The New Year promises to bring quite a few changes to the Lowell and Bedford campuses of Middlesex Community College, with President Carole Cowan retiring after nearly 40 years at the college, nearly 25 of them as its third president. Cowan will be finishing her tenure with the college on the last day of February. Dr. James Mabry from Mesa Community College in Mesa, Arizona, was chosen unanimously in December by the MCC Board of Trustees to take Cowan's place. He'll be coming on board at Middlesex before the end of February, and expects to spend a good chunk of his first few weeks getting to know many of the locals not just on the Lowell landscape, but for the college's suburban campus as well.

