PHOENIX (AP) — The continued decline in enrollment at Mesa Community College could force the downsizing or even closure of its Red Mountain campus.

The Arizona Republic reports that full-time enrollment at MCC has dropped by nearly a quarter since the 2010-11 school year and by more than a third at the Red Mountain campus specifically.

The 100-acre Red Mountain campus opened less than 15 years ago.

MCC officials have outlined a possible plan involving the conversion of Red Mountain from a campus to an instructional site.

Under that proposal, administrative and enrollment services would be consolidated at the MCC campus.
